Bridgewell, a nonprofit providing social and human services, announced it received a $25,000 naming gift from the Kayem Foundation. Funds from the gift will be used to replace equipment in the sensory room at its Boston Street Day Habilitation Center, which was damaged in a flash flood in 2017, and serves as a therapeutic space that facilitates the learning and practice of self-modulation and stress management skills. Christopher Tuttle, interim CEO of Bridgewell, called the space "invaluable" and said, "We thank the Kayem Foundation for their generous gift to restore vital resources to the room, and for their continued support of Bridgewell and its services."
